

Following last month's test footage leak, the good folks from Kotaku have recieved a trailer, gameplay footage, as well additional info from developers THQ Brisbane regarding the much-anticipated game they were working on before their studio closed; Marvel's The Avengers. Seemingly looking promising, watch three videos below, and additional details lower.

The source tells Kotaku Australia that it was the only game that THQ Studio Australia (Studio Oz) was working on at the time of the closure and they had already poured 18 months of hard work into crafting what was anticipated to be a high quality Marvel movie game instead of just another licensed title. When the developers at the studio got wind that Studio Oz was in trouble, they made these videos for Marvel in hope that the comic book giant would come on board and prevent any closures. Despite the superhero first-person brawler impressing Marvel, the project was ultimately canned

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/MarvelFreshman/news/?a=46408&t=Gameplay_Footage_And_Details_From_THQs_Delayed_Video_Game_For_iThe_Avengers_i