

Speaking with Total Film (via The Geek Files), Monsters director Gareth Edwards talks about working on Warner Bros. and Legendary Pictures' much anticipated Godzilla reboot. He discusses taking on such a popular franchise, as well as how "emotionally involved" he is in working on the film, which is expected to be in 3D. "I've never worked this hard, this long and been this emotionally involved in something that's lasted only a few seconds since the time I lost my virginity! But the reaction has been amazing and I can't wait for the fans to see our final product. "I've always been interested in Godzilla and the ideas around him. I really wanted to see another Godzilla film and jumped at the opportunity. My main idea was to imagine 'If this really happened, what would it be like?' I want to take a grounded, realistic approach to a Godzilla film." Additionally, Edwards comments on

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/BatFreak/news/?a=68281>