Here are some of the main highlights from the stuntmans interview with Comicus. Be sure to follow the link at the bottom of this page to read the whole thing, including which other movies you can see his work in after the highly anticipated release of Warner Bros' Green Lantern. How's been working with director Martin Campbell? "Working with Martin Campbell was definitely an experience. He was so fun to watch work. He would say the funniest craziest things and everyone just loved to watch him work." I suppose you had to train yourself before the shooting begun: did you took a particular training even in view of your work on Green Lantern? If it's so, what kind of training did you have? "I did not have to do any specific target training for this film. We train 5-6 days a week already in almost every aspect of the job possible so we are ready
