

A great new King Arthur movie may be just around the corner, but its path to the cinema has been somewhat tumultuous, to say the least. Variety reported earlier this week that Warner Bros. has pushed King Arthur: Legend of the Sword from its former March 24th date back two months to May 12. The potential franchise-starter will now face-off with James Gunn's Guardians of the Galaxy, Vol. 2, which will be in its second week, and Ridley Scott's Alien: Covenant, which arrives the following week. While that doesn't seem ideal, it may turn out to be for the best as it previously would've had to take on more immediate competition with Power Rangers & Life opening the same weekend as well as holdovers Beauty and the Beast & Kong: Skull Island in their second and third weeks, respectively, and then, Ghost in the Shell the week after. This is the fourth time the Guy Ritchie-directed feature has been pushed back after initially being dated for July 22, 2016 before being

Read more: <https://www.comicbookmovie.com/fantasy/guy-ritchies-king-arthur-legend-of-the-sword-moves-to-a-prime-summer-2017-a147448>