

When talented Hail, Caesar! star Alden Ehrenreich was cast as the young Han Solo, quite a few people came around to the idea of an origin story for the legendary Star Wars character, and of course it helps that he's shown such enthusiasm for the role up to this point. Variety caught up with Ehrenreich at the premiere of his new movie, Rules Don't Apply, and although he obviously couldn't give too much away he did express excitement at the prospect of working with Donald Glover (who was recently cast as Lando Calrissian), and confirmed the inclusion of a younger incarnation of Chewbacca. "I'm allowed to say that I'm really excited about Donald Glover's casting. I think he's going to be great in the role because he's such a talented and interesting guy. And I can say that Chewbacca's in the film, although I know that's not a huge spoiler. He's as much younger as I am in the film, so, I think

Read more: https://www.comicbookmovie.com/scifi_movies/star_wars/han-solo-actor-alden-ehrenreich-praises-costar-donald-a146727