

Back in August of last year, Alcon Entertainment producer Andrew Kosove said that there were no plans to bring back Harrison Ford in Ridley Scott's upcoming Blade Runner movie. Whether or not the film is a sequel or prequel has yet to be announced, but the following news may indicate that the movie is indeed a direct sequel to the original film. Twitch Film has learned that Harrison Ford - who played lead character 'Deckard' in the original 1982 film - has entered early negotiations to join the new Blade Runner installment. As the discussions are still early, it's possible that things won't work out and Ford won't appear in the movie. Still, it can be considered evidence that the film is a sequel to Scott's original film. In addition, back in November, Ridley Scott himself stated the film was 'liable' to be a sequel. But expect an official announcement

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/BatFreak/news/?a=54075&t=Harrison Ford In Early Negotiations For New BLADE RUNNER Film>