

Source: Orlando Sentinel Henry Cavill has not had it easy in Hollywood. He came close to landing roles in Harry Potter, Twilight, James Bond and Bryan Singer's Superman but couldn't close the deal. Well, lucky for him he's the kind of guy to use those failures as motivation. "The funny thing is, that the roles I almost had are the ones that kept me going," he says. "Because almost getting Bond or the previous Superman were a sign, to me, that I should keep on pluggin.' And I was right. It's turning into a GREAT year." When testing for Theseus in Tarsem Singh's Immortals, here's what transpired as recounted by Henry. "When Tarsem [Singh, the director] and I first met, I did a screen test and he said, 'OK, let's take the shirt off [Editor's Note: awkward]. By the way, you know if you get this part, a six-pack

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/GraphicCity/news/?a=49568&t=Henry_Cavill_On_How_The_Almost_Parts_Kept_Him_Going