

Talking to The Vancouver Sun, Immortals director Tarsem Singh had this to say when quizzed about casting a then relative unknown like Henry Cavill in the movie and how the news that he would play Superman helped to ultimately justify his decision. "They knew this was such a big film and I could go with one of the big actors, so why was I stuck on this unknown? But I wouldn't come off the pole. They finally gave up and said, 'Have your guy.' When I cast Henry as an unknown, I was considered the fool. Eight months ago he's suddenly cast as Superman, and I'm the genius." Cavill's co-star Freida Pinto also shared her thoughts on hearing the news that he had been cast as the iconic DC superhero, "I didn't see it on set, I have to be honest. That might be because he was covered in muck all day
