

Chatting with the press promoting this week's Immortals release, actor Henry Cavill expectedly discussed his leading 'Superman' role in Warner Bros.' highly-anticipated Man Of Steel reboot. Weighing in on potential criticism, set photos, keeping things confidential, and the "stylized" experience working with director Zack Snyder, read what Cavill says. The British actor revealed to L.A.'s Daily News that the best thing about the Man Of Steel production is donning the iconic costume. However, when the first photos hit the web, he prepared himself for potential "haters." "I block it out," he said. "You have to. Especially when it comes to whatever people want to say, and everyone's entitled to express their opinions. But you never know where an opinion's coming from or why it's coming in such a way. Sometimes it can affect you, certainly, so you have to be capable of taking everything with a pinch of salt. The nice stuff

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/MarvelFreshman/news/?a=49476&t=Henry_Cavill_Weighs_In_On_iMan_Of_Steeli_Secrecy_And_Superman_Suit_Criticism