

The Lone Ranger saves Silver's life from an enraged buffalo and, in gratitude, Silver chooses to give up his wild life to carry him. In another episode, however, the Lone Ranger, in a surge of conscience, releases Silver back to the wild. The episode ends with Silver returning, bringing along a companion who becomes Tonto's horse, Scout. Whenever the Lone Ranger mounts Silver, he shouts, "Hi-yo, Silver! Away!" Besides sounding dramatic, this shout originally served to tell the radio audience that a riding sequence was about to start. In an echo of the Lone Ranger's line, Tonto frequently says, "Git-um up, Scout!" - Wikipedia I have confirmed that legendary Hollywood horse trainer Rex Peterson is in fact training multiple horses for the role of Silver in Gore Verbinski's new film. Gore who just won an Oscar for his animated film, Rango, will begin filming this week. Producer Jerry Bruckheimer confirmed that filming will begin
