

Featuring the voice talent of Eric Stonestreet (Modern Family), Seth Green (Buffy the Vampire Slayer, American Dad, Robot Chicken), Ron Livingston (Office Space), Greg Grunberg (Love Bites), Eddie Kaye Thomas (The Incredible Flame), and Rob Riggle (The Daily Show with Jon Stewart), the superhero satire is slowly building buzz across the internet. The 6-episode series will premiere on July 20th on Sony's online network, Crackle. The Hollywood Reporter was able to catch up with the shows creators, Josh Cooke and Matt Oates to discuss the show. Here's what they had to say: On the creation of the show: Josh Cooke: Matt came up with the basic concept of "superheroes in therapy" while he was in college, but the idea sat on the shelf for many years. Then about three years ago, I was over at his house and I asked him if he had any concepts for an Internet

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/GraphicCity/news/?a=41351&t=Hilarious New Superhero Therapy Show Set To Debut On Crackle