Geoff Boucher of The LA Times talked with Hugh Jackman by phone recently. It seems the Aussie actor had much to say about his next foray into portraying every one's favorite nasty, little, Canadian, mutant known as The Wolverine. From Hero Complex... I remember coming by your office back in the summer of 2009, and you were already talking about your hopes of making a movie out of Marvel's 1982 "Wolverine" miniseries, the classic by Chris Claremont and Frank Miller. And now you're doing just that — and with director Darren Aronofsky, of all people. You must be thrilled. I'm really, really pumped about it. I feel like all the planets are finally aligned to make a great movie. We finally have the character and with this mythology — ever since [the 2000 Bryan Singer film] "X-Men," when I was kind of hanging around and reading all these comics, because I was cast
