

A few weeks back, 20th Century Fox launched a very neat viral site (www.1974framesoflogan.com) that allowed fans to sign up to receive a physical post card featuring a single frame from the upcoming final trailer for James Mangold's Logan. Once all 1,974 frames were sent out and received, the studio asked for recipients to post their frames online and once each was accounted for, they would unveil the second full-length theatrical trailer. Well, it sounds like the frames have finally been shipped out as Mangold and star Hugh Jackman have gone ahead and posted their postcards, featuring the first and last images from the next trailer. Neither photo reveals much about what we'll see in theaters come March 3, but the final frame does give us a pretty cool look at a worn-down Wolverine driving with Dafne Keen's Laura sitting in the passenger seat, looking out at a barren wasteland. Check out both images below and if you were one of the lucky 1,974

Read more: https://www.comicbookmovie.com/x-men/the_wolverine/hugh-jackman-james-mangold-share-the-first-last-frames-from-a148146