

Talking to The Baltimore Sun, Hugo Weaving has seemingly revealed a reluctance to return to the role of the villainous Red Skull (or any other blockbuster movies) any time soon. While he doesn't specifically say he wouldn't be willing to face off against Captain America again, it doesn't exactly sound like he's desperate to either! Here is an excerpt from the report for you to judge his comments for yourselves. Though Weaving says that such big-budget fare as "Captain America" can be a lot of fun -- not to mention lucrative -- these movies don't present the kind of acting challenges on which he thrives. "I think I've about had enough," he says. "I'm not sure how many more of them I'll make. It doesn't feel to me as though they've been the majority of my work, though that's probably the way it seems to most other people." Here's hoping a big enough pay cheque

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/joshw24/news/?a=43905&t=Hugo_Weaving_Not_Too_Keen_On_Reprising_His_Role_As_The_Red_Skull_In_Future