

It's not out of the ordinary for an actor to go through some sort of extreme just to ensure a character or a scene looks authentic, but what Tom Hiddleston did was bordering on Loki-crazy. Hiddleston said that when they were shooting the fight scene, "Joss [Whedon, the director] came over and said, 'Guys, I'm just not really buying it. You need to sell it more. You either need to hit each other harder or you need to react bigger.'" As they readied for the next take, Hiddleston took a moment to confer with Hemsworth. "I said to Chris, 'Dude, just hit me. Just hit me because I'm protected here and it's fine.' He's like, 'Are you sure?' I was like, 'Yeah, it will look great. Just go for it.'" Cameras then started to roll, and Hiddleston said, "[Chris] really went for it and he's just pummeling

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/nailbiter111/news/?a=59010>