

“His friend was huge, like HUGE!”- Captain America: Civil War came with an amusing post credit tag that saw our friendly neighbor Spider-Man (Tom Holland) explaining to his “unusually attractive aunt,” how he received his injuries. After he “technically” told her the truth about what happened, he unveiled his webshooter light, which projected his sensational Spidey-Signal onto the roof. In the final cut of the film, the Russo Brothers went with the design shown in the banner image above, even so, Perception (the graphic company that worked on the scene and countless other Marvel Studio films), revealed an alternate version of Spidey’s signal that came with a nifty message from Iron Man. Check that out below. (CLICK TO ENLARGE) If you can’t read Stark’s message in the image above, it reads “Swing by the tower. Got some new upgrades you should see.” Could those “upgrades” be referring to the Iron Spider? Possibly. But considering the fact that this design never made it into the

Read more: <https://www.comicbookmovie.com/spider-man/iron-man-left-a-message-for-spider-man-in-this-cool-new-concept-art-a146688>