

Last January, The Hollywood Reporter ran a story claiming that the then untitled Spider-Man reboot would have a lowly budget of $80 Million. Not exactly a lot for a 3D superhero movie, so many assumed it was a mistake or early figure. Well, it looks like the sceptics were right! Check out what actor Richard Norton had to say while talking to Moviehole. "Unfortunately I can't say much right now because I'm not allowed to. However I can say it was mostly stunt work. I doubt you'll even recognise me. I play a SWAT guy but it's a small part. I was on-set for four weeks and the experience was just phenomenal...it's a $220 million budget movie!" "Vic Armstrong was the second unit director and it was great working with him. Andy Armstrong, his brother, was the stunt coordinator and an old friend. Andy's the one who brought me onboard so for all

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/joshw24/news/?a=37473&t=Is_The_Budget_For_The_Amazing_Spider-Man_Actually_220_Million