

We don't know what the next Star Wars Anthology movie will be after the release of Han Solo, but the signs are pointing to it being Boba Fett. With a script in relatively advanced stages, this probably shouldn't come as too much of a surprise, but it did look for a while as if the movie might be scrapped altogether after Fantastic Four helmer Josh Trank was unceremoniously dumped from the franchise. My Entertainment World has added Boba Fett to a list of upcoming film production, a sign that it will likely start development in the very near future. Apparently, it's set to shoot at Pinewood Studios in London, and we have what may be a synopsis: "An origin story of the galaxy's most notorious bounty hunter. Boba Fett is a Mandalorian warrior who was trained by his father-figure Jango Fett and became a notorious bounty hunter throughout the galaxy." Take that with a pinch of salt though. Why? Well, notices like these
