

When Logan screened this past Friday at the Berlin Film Festival (and this morning in Dublin, incidentally), those in attendance were not treated to a post-credits scene - but when the first round of reviews hit, they were accompanied by a rumor that the theatrical cut would include a few extra minutes. Now, Collider has confirmed that the version of the film general audiences will see on March 3rd will indeed feature a stinger of some description. There are no details on what/who it will involve, but having seen Logan I can tell you that it is somewhat surprising that James Mangold and/or the studio decided to follow what is pretty much a perfect final shot (don't worry, no spoilers) of what is very much a standalone story with some kind of tease or lead-in to another film in the X-Men franchise. At any rate, whatever the scene entails is going to remain a mystery until Logan is officially released early next month,

Read more: <https://www.comicbookmovie.com/x-men/logan/it-looks-like-the-theatrical-cut-of-logan-will-indeed-feature-a-a149109>