

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/geekboymovienews/news/?a=27578&t=Ivan_Reitman_Talks_iGhostbusters_3i_Status

We've all read the many rumors and articles on line regarding the status of the highly anticipated and much-wanted third film in the Ghostbusters franchise. At one point, it was rumored that the project was dead. Then it was back on and featured a rather "meh" story. Bill Murray even said the project was headed nowhere. It's been long-rumored that Bill Murray was the person holding the project up with his on-again-off-again attitude, as well as him essentially having the final say. ComingSoon recently sat down with director Ivan Reitman, who has been promoting his latest film No Strings Attached. But they could not pass up the opportunity to ask about Ghostbusters 3. Here's how it went down. CS: So, you know we have to ask you what's going on with "Ghostbusters 3," right? Ivan Reitman: [laughs] We have a really good script, but Bill (Murray) has to read it. He hasn't read it.