

We fans are a strange bunch. We like go around whining to anyone who will listen about how movie studios treat us and our favorite comic book heroes with disrespect, how Hollywood is ruining comic books, etc. But the fact of the matter is that we are nothing more than spoiled children. We scourge the internet looking for any news we can about upcoming comic book movies, and once we find something we don't agree with, we yell and scream and smash stuff until mommy and daddy (the studios) give us something to shut us up, and even then, that will only keep us happy for so long before we throw another tantrum. Green Lantern is a great example of this behavior. Fans complained about the casting of Ryan Reynolds, the overuse of CGI, Blake Lively, etc. Warner Brothers did their best to appease us, spending millions to improve the CGI,

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/Jamedog/news/?a=39695&t=Jamedog_Reviews_iGreen_Lanterni