

Skyfall hits UK cinemas this weekend (it's not out in the US until November 9th) and The Daily Mail are reporting that plans are already in motion for the next instalment. There was a four year wait between Quantum of Solace and the latest Sam Mendes helmed film, but with Daniel Craig signed up for at least another two Bond movies, the studio clearly don't want to wait as long this time. According to the site, "Bond 24 is already in pre-pre-production and the plan is for it to start shooting at Pinewood Studios around this time next year and be ready for cinemas in the autumn of 2014." They go on to add that regular screenwriters Neal Purvis and Robert Wade (who have worked on a total of five Bond movies) will not be returning for the follow-up, with Skyfall writer John Logan instead set to return to pen the

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/JoshWildingNewsAndReviews/news/?a=69277>