

While Nebula (Karen Gillan) had a small but memorable role in Guardians of the Galaxy, she's set to have a much larger presence when she returns in the sequel next year, seemingly as a member of the team. The assassin daughter of Thanos is arguably one of the best female characters in the Marvel Cinematic Universe, and it seems that director James Gunn believes the villain could carry her own film. When responding to a fan who said that Nebula should lead her own solo film, Gunn wholeheartedly agreed and said it was something he's thought about since he started working on the franchise. "I have a few favorites myself, but I agree that Nebula should lead her own film - it's something I've thought about from the beginning." Of course, Nebula will have to contend with her sister Gamora (Zoe Saldana) when they reunite in Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2, and after their fight aboard the Dark Aster in the first film,

Read more: https://www.comicbookmovie.com/guardians_of_the_galaxy/guardians_of_the_galaxy_2/james-gunn-says-hes-thought-a146065