

Though Josh Boone's New Mutants is on the horizon, we're still not certain about the future of 20th Century Fox's main X-Men franchise after the relatively disappointing performance of Bryan Singer's Apocalypse. A recent report indicated that the studio might be planning some kind of soft reboot while utilizing the same cast - however, both Michael Fassbender and Jennifer Lawrence seemed very uncertain about reprising their roles when quizzed about it in separate interviews. Fortunately, James McAvoy has a much more positive update for fans - though his return does seem dependent on how strong the part they write for him turns out to be. "If they offer me a really good part, I'll be in. If it's not a really good part, I'll be like 'Eh, I'll think about it.' But I've always loved playing Charles and I've always had pretty interesting things to do as Charles, so if that continues, then yeah, of course I'd love to take part." Charles Xavier is

Read more: <https://www.comicbookmovie.com/x-men/james-mcavoy-says-hed-love-to-return-f-or-more-x-men-movies-as-long-as-its-a-a147924>