

Regardless of his race, Supergirl's James Olsen really doesn't have much in common with his comic book counterpart. For starters, he looks like he could probably beat up Superman in a fight, but he may very well get the opportunity to do that when he becomes a vigilante in season two of The CW series. The fan-favourite supporting character is going to adopt the identity of Guardian, a hero who was created by Joe Simon and Jack Kirby. Once a cop named Jim Harper, patrolling Metropolis's Suicide Slum, he eventually became the vigilante known as Guardian to "guard" society from criminals. It will be Olsen who wields the shield here though, but won't be telling Supergirl about it. "James is going to decide that he can no longer be a sidekick, so he's going to become a vigilante," explains executive producer Andrew Kreisberg. "He's going to become Guardian, complete with the shield, which is going to cause a massive problem in his

Read more: https://www.comicbookmovie.com/dc_tv/supergirl/james-olsen-taking-on-a-new-role-in-supergirl-as-the-vigilante-a145912