

The 25 year old actor that won acclaim as an eleven year old boy that has a deep desire to dance in Billy Elliott is hitting the promotional circuit for Tintin, and of course there will be a slew of questions about Spider-Man. The role that he lost out on to fellow Brit Andrew Garfield (The Social Network). Where as Andrew was brought to tears at the San Diego Comic Con when talking about Peter Parker, the opposite approach is being taken by Jamie. I'm sure Jamie is still wincing about the rejection, but to sound as though he had no interest in playing the character is disturbing. Last I checked Jamie's phone is exactly ringing off the hook with job offers. His biggest roles in recent years is a supporting role in the forgettable Jumper and voicing Tintin. JAMIE BELL - THE AMAZING SPIDER-MAN Excerpt from this month's GQ Having screen-tested for Spider-man,
