

Wolves was first announced back in 2010, and seemed to drop off the radar afterwards. But it seems David Hayter (Aka the voice of Solid Snake) has been keeping on top of the movie, as last week Lucas Till (Havok in X-Men: First Class) won the lead role, and now he's being joined by Jason Momoa (Khal Drogo in Game Of Thrones) and newcomer Merritt Patterson. Hayter is set to direct Wolves from his own script, and the story is said to focus an eighteen-year-old werewolf (Till) accused of murdering his own parents, who goes on the run and winds up in a small town named Lupine Ridge (yes, really) that has a history of supernatural happenings. Momoa will play the villain, a "badass werewolf patriarch." Patterson's role has not been revealed yet. We haven't had a really good Werewolf movie since..umm, Am American Werewolf In London? There has to have
