

Over the past few weeks, Darren Aronofsky has been casting for his anticipated Biblical epic Noah, based on the classic Bible story about Noah's Ark and also based on his graphic novel (which is now available in Europe). Some of the casting reports that came in, however, were a bit premature. One of them was the involvement of Jennifer Connelly, who was originally said to be in final negotiations to play Noah's wife, Naameh, in the film. Despite this, more reliable sources said that this news wasn't true (though she was definitely being considered, and that Julianne Moore was also up for the role). Now, Variety has officially confirmed that Connelly is in negotiations to co-star in Noah. If discussions end well, she will re-team with star Russell Crowe (A Beautiful Mind) and director Darren Aronofsky (Requiem For A Dream). It's been said that Aronofsky has been interested in casting Connelly

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/BatFreak/news/?a=61959>