

When the release date of Star Trek 2 was confirmed, it came with the news that the sequel would be shot in 3D. Well, not so according to director J.J. Abrams. Talking to MTV News (via Trek News) he confirmed plans to shoot the highly anticipated follow up in 2D and convert in in 3D afterwards. While this is obviously extremely disappointing, the good news is that he's considering IMAX. Check out the video interview below - there's also a transcript for those of you based outside the US - and sound off with your thoughts in the usual place. Get More: Movie Trailers, Movies Blog On The Current Status Of Star Trek 2: "It's a little early to be talking about 'Star Trek,' but I will say that they wrote — the three writers, Damon [Lindelof], Bob [Orci] and Alex [Kurtzman] — they wrote the most amazing script, and I'm thrilled to get

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/JoshWildingNewsAndReviews/news/?a=51632&t=JJ_Abrams_Issues_STAR_TREK_2_Update_Will_Be_Shot_In_2D_And_Converted_To_3D