

We haven't heard much lately from J.J. Abrams concerning the highly anticipated sequel to his Star Trek film. That's because he was so busy with his latest project, Super 8, that he hasn't had time to commit to Star Trek 2. In a recent interview, however, he talked about how the script was being handled, with Damon Lindelof having a stronger hand in the script writing. From Movieweb.com: "Damon is working on the script for this one. As busy as I've been with Super 8, I remember that when we did the first one, Damon was that busy with Lost. So it's going to be very cool to have him on board as a writer. There are some amazing ideas. These are not just great friends of mine, but they're great writers. I'm thrilled and very optimistic that it's going to get to where it needs to get to." Says his main focus

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/BatFreak/news/?a=36734&t=JJ_Abrams_To_Commit_To_IStar_Trek_2i_After_ISuper_8i_Is_Released