

"I just saw a test screening of John Carter. Loved it!" A female member of a movie discussion board posted that quote that you see above and that lead to the usual naysayers doubting that she had seen Disney's John Carter. She then went on to prove to the doubters that she did go to a test screening by participating in an impromptu question and answer session. What you will read below are excerpts of her responses. These were collected and published on a different website, The John Carter Files. To be fair there is nothing that completely proves that she has seen it. So, you can take this with a grain of salt if you like, but it seems legit to me.

Background I like to go to the movies for the sake of the art itself. I studied screenwriting for a few years and...have been a writing coach. I look for good
