

In a lengthy interview with The Geek Files, Marvel artist and Kick-Ass co-creator John Romita Jr. has talked in detail about Jeff Wadlow's upcoming big screen adaptation of Kick-Ass 2. When the first movie went into production, the comic book was unfinished (hence some of the differences in the last act of Matthew Vaughn and Jane Goldman's screenplay) but now the second volume is on sale and we're two issues into Hit-Girl. He also goes on to share his thoughts on The Avengers and The Dark Knight - turns out that he's yet to see Christopher Nolan's final film in the franchise - revealing why Marvel's take on their characters is far more to his liking. Be sure to click on the link at the bottom of the page in order to read the interview in full. On His Involvement With The Big Screen Adaptation Of Kick-Ass 2: As far as

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/JoshWildingNewsAndReviews/news/?a=65188>