It's a heckishly slow news day, so here's a roundup of juicy news tidbits for you Harry Potter fans: Firstly, according to fan sites BlogHogwarts and HarryLatino, the soundtrack for the very last Harry Potter movie will have some input from Enya and John Williams (who is of course acclaimed for having scored the first three films of the franchise) in addition to Alexandre Desplat. According to the sites, Enya will write a track called "Through the Darkness" and Desplat and Williams will work together on the production of various other tracks. At the moment, this is pure rumor - however, it's worth noting that Williams has made it known he would like to return in some capacity and Desplat himself has commented that he would include certain aspects of Williams' themes anyway. Secondly, the list of features for the Deathly Hallows Part 1 Blu-ray has been revealed, and the second item is... #
