

The movie production for The Lone Ranger was canceled months ago due to how big the budget was, and Disney was afraid of it being a failure after the numbers of Cowboys & Aliens on the box office, now all that is in the past, and the movie will indeed happen, with Armie Hammer and Johnny Depp on the cast, and with Gore Verbinski on the director's chair. Johnny Depp, who is set to play Tonto on the movie, was interviewed by Larry King on CNN this weekend, and said that their version of the movie has quite a bit of humor: "There is a script, it's a very funny, good script...there's a boatload of humor." "What I like about Tonto is the idea that this character who is thought of as 'the sidekick'—that's the thing that always bugged me about The Lone Ranger is 'Well why is the Indian the sidekick?"
