

Just yesterday, we heard from Emily Blunt about why she declined the roles of Black Widow and Peggy Carter and we'll now hear a tale along the same lines from actor Jon Hamm. While speaking to IFC about his new film "Friends With Kids," the actor discussed his apparently, numerous brushes with the comic book movie genre and why his career has not ventured into "costumes and spandex." "I've been offered my share of superhero movies, but I think I've aged out of that," he said. However, Hamm quickly went into PR mode and clarified that he's been in "talks" for such roles and that he's had numerous chances to play costumed heroes yet it just wasn't a right fit. "My name has come up in a lot of superhero discussions," Hamm said. "It's a tough thing, you know? It's a tough game to get into. I have mad, crazy respect for the

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/GraphicCity/news/?a=55825>