

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/Poolzone/news/?a=27697&t=Jonah_Hex_Up_for_an_Oscar

Remember the movie Jonah Hex? Yeah, I don't want to either. Out of all the issues everyone has had with this film, from the heavy metal score to Megan Fox's fake Southern Belle accent, you'd think Hollywood would have locked this critically panned film in the Vault of Shame. Never to open it again. But alas, it was not to be. Over at the Hollywood Reporter, seven films have been announced to be in the makeup category of this year's Academy Awards. "Alice in Wonderland and The Fighter are among the seven films that remain in the makeup competition of the 83rd Academy Awards. The additional titles are Barney's Version, Jonah Hex, True Grit, The Way Back and The Wolfman." Although the article focuses mainly on Alice and The Fighter (which I haven't had the opportunity to see as of yet), and these are not the final nominations, I am still perplexed as to the