

Talking to IGN Movies, The Dark Knight Rises screenwriter Jonathan Nolan has revealed what it was like to see all of the leaked set photos and footage from the movie (which is directed by his brother in case you didn't realize - the clue is in the surname!) on the web, while also sharing his thoughts on the people uploading them, and the scale of the highly anticipated DC Comics adaptation. "It was great because we were working [on Person of Interest]. So that was the only way I was able to get down to set was to watch it on YouTube!" "Yeah, I think the goal with those movies is just to make something so...You know, Chris loves to shoot on these IMAX cameras, these massive cameras. As soon as you release something in the theaters, like a trailer, people go in and they record it with their iPhone or

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/joshw24/news/?a=47347&t=Jonathan_Nolan_Comments_On_Leaked_iThe_Dark_Knight_Rises_Set_Photos