

Comic Book Resources were on hand yesterday at Waterstones in London, where Jonathan Ross (best known in the UK for his television work) and artist Tommy Lee Edwards discussed the hardcover release of their creator owned comic book series, Turf. While there's already talk of a follow up, most interesting were the comments made by Ross in regards to a possible big screen adaptation. Here is an excerpt from the site's report. Since Ross is married to screenwriter Jane Goldman, who penned both "Kick Ass" and "X-Men: First Class" for director Matthew Vaughn, questions inevitably turned to the prospect of a screen adaptation of "Turf." Although the collected release has renewed interest in the property, Ross said he and Edwards were biding their time and that while they want to do it with Vaughn, he probably wouldn't direct. Ross also said Goldman definitely wouldn't be writing the adaptation, jokilngy describing the idea

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/joshw24/news/?a=46039&t=Jonathan_Ross_Reveals_Potential_Plans_For_iTurf_Adaptation_Matthew_Vaughn_To_Be_Involved