

There's been a fair bit of controversy in regards to the relaunch of the DC Universe, and it's completely understandable. While I may be more of a "Marvel Guy," I can still appreciate why long term fans were upset to hear to the news that the company would pretty much start things from scratch with the release of 52 #1 titles this September. While they're not exactly wiping out 70+ years of history, this is still a fresh start for DC, and at this point it's still way too early to decide whether or not it was the smart choice to make. Over the past couple of years, I've made a real effort to get involved with DC, and while it was easy enough to get into the various Batman and Green Lantern titles, I often found it difficult to understand and appreciate the convoluted and confusing universe. This wasn't exactly
