

As production of The Avengers came to a close in Cleveland, Ohio, it was time to head east to New York City in order to finish shooting the film. The entire team assembled for one last time for a scene in Central Park. "Movies are not usually shot in order, but finishing in New York, allowed us to shoot the last scene of the movie on essentially the last day of production with the whole cast in Central Park," says Marvel Studios President and executive producer Kevin Feige. "So half of the day was making sure we get the scene perfect, and the other half was saying goodbye before we meet again down the line at the premiere." "What's great is we're at a point now where almost every character has their own franchise and fans," he continues. "So you have all these little kids looking up and seeing Chris Hemsworth and

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/JoshWildingNewsAndReviews/news/?a=57290>