

Inside the latest "Comic Book Movie Preview" issue of Total Film magazine, the director of Marvel Studios' superhero ensemble movie The Avengers, Joss Whedon, dishes on managing multiple leading actors as well managing their shared screen time. Seemingly confirming the film being lead by 'Steve Rogers,' check out what he had to say below! Is it hard to give every character a descent share of screen time? "I think the whole point of a team movie is to explain why every member is there, so it's about getting those moments for each character. I think we end up identifying with Steve Rogers, he's our intro into the modern world - because he's only recently joined it. Sometimes we refer to him as Luke Skywalker... but obviously a lot less whiny." Does that mean you've got a Han Solo? "Well that would be Tony Stark!" How is it managing a set full of leading actors? "You might imagine

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/MarvelFreshman/news/?a=45882&t=Joss_Whedon_Comments_On_Managing_Characters_Screen_Time_In_iThe_Avengersi