

In doing press at the Toronto International Film Festival for the premiere of his praised take on the classic comedy, Much Ado About Nothing, filmmaker Joss Whedon further discussed his involvement with Marvel Studios and their anticipated Phase 2 slate. Although his contract allows his creative input into the films that will ultimately lead up to his highly-anticipated 2015 sequel to The Avengers, Whedon tells Vancouver.24HRS he surely doesn't want to be a burden on the filmmakers of the other Phase 2 flicks. "Very talented people are writing and directing these movies, and what I don't want to be is the guy they dread, who's going to come in and say" - here, Whedon affects a pompous British accent - "'Oh, well I have the power to say change this.' I'm not that." Although unable to divulge specific details regarding Marvel's The Avengers sequel, in a typical fashion, he

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/MarvelFreshman/news/?a=67034>