

In another segment of New York blog Vulture's lengthy chat with Marvel's The Avengers helmer Joss Whedon, the critically acclaimed filmmaker shared thoughts on the superhero ensemble flick's box office success. After being asked precisely has it all “sunk in” yet, Joss Whedon jokingly responded: “It never really has, but when it does, I'm going to become such an enormous dick. [Laughs.] I'm going to have a personal dog polisher and the biggest posse ever. I'm going to be insufferable — well, I mean more insufferable than I already am. You know, at some point, the numbers become meaningless. They're large, and you can't really count that high. I felt like I had a particular mission in making what I felt was a slightly old-fashioned movie, because I grew up wanting to make summer movies and wanting to make superhero movies, and I got to do both at once.

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/MarvelFreshman/news/?a=66597>