The last we heard for the much-awaited fourth Jurassic Park film was from the director of the third adaption, Joe Johnston. Johnston, currently in post-production with Marvel's Captain America film stated that the 4th 'Jurassic' film would be unlike anything we've ever seen, breaking away from the first three films. While it's been said Johnston would return as director, a few images courtesy of Behind The Thrills, suggest that production for the fourth Jurassic Park adaption has already begun. These images were taken at the Universal Studios lot, with the production board suggesting Jurassic Park 4 taking up four full stages on the lot. While we don't know if this is this is the film we've been waiting for, a simple explanation could be that early set construction may have begun, with Johnston possibly supervising. Anyhow, what do you think? Would you mind returning to Jurassic Park in 2012, which is being
