

Firstly, here is an excerpt from the report over at Deadline explaining the latest development in the planned Terminator movie from Justin Lin. Things are starting to move on The Terminator franchise, but a plan by rights owner Megan Ellison and Arnold Schwarzenegger to put the first of two pictures in production for fourth quarter of 2012 has forced director Justin Lin to drop out. But borrowing the film's signature phrase "I'll be back," Lin has left the door open to a return if Ellison and Schwarzenegger will wait until he completes the sixth installment of The Fast and the Furious franchise. The site goes on to reveal that Lin has been working closely with Schwarzenegger and Ellison in order come up with a story for what would be a conclusion to the battle between the human race and Skynet. However, with no script or screenwriter even attached, and the current lack of

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/joshw24/news/?a=46736&t=Justin_Lin_No_Longer_Helming_iTerminator_Will_The_Rights_Revert_Back_To_James_Cameron