

"What they're doing with the movie is creating its own story, but it has to be true to the source material or we'll get fucking murdered. To be blunt." Last June when it was announced that the Michael Bay-produced, Jonathan Liebesman-directed Ninja Turtles was pushed back five months to May 2014. It left many wondering, what could be the cause? Sources for The Hollywood Reporter claimed it was due to the script not being up to snuff. Deadline was informed by their sources that the delay was needed so that producers could trim the budget by as much as $10-20M to get it down to $125 million in total. None of those reasons has been confirmed by Paramount. Well, according to a recent interview that Kevin Eastman participated in with CBR, there are two brand new reasons. "Essentially they pushed it back for two reasons: One is the director, Jonathan Liebesman, wanted to

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/nailbiter111/news/?a=65327>