

THOR has been around in the pages of Marvel's comics since 1962 and has just made his first journey to the big screen. Ashley Edward Miller and Zack Stentz (pictured above) worked on the screenplay (along with Don Payne) and will be at the MCM Expo London Comic-Con on May 27 to 29. The two writers also penned X-Men: First Class. The Coventry Telegraph has an interview in which Marvel Studios boss (and Thor producer) Kevin Feige joins Miller and Stentz to explain the process for adapting the comic book god into a mainstream Hollywood blockbuster. Feige said: "There are a lot of fun things that Stan [Lee] and Jack [Kirby] did in the early Thor comics - that Walt Simonson brought to life later - that J. Michael Straczynski has done an amazing job handling in the recent comics. He has taken the myths and brought them home. You may have

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/scifiheroes/news/?a=37181&t=Kevin_Feige_and_writers_Ashley_Edward_Miller_and_Zack_Stentz_reveal_concept_behind_Thor