

It was widely reported last August that Community/Rick and Morty creator Dan Harmon was brought in by Marvel for script writing duties on extra scenes being filmed for Doctor Strange. While the nature of those scenes were a mystery, many speculated that it was to add humor to the film, given Harmon's writing background. As it turns out, those reports were true! Marvel Studios president Kevin Feige recently spoke to EW about Harmon's contributions to the film, saying that they admired the blend of humor and sci-fi on Rick and Morty and felt it would benefit Doctor Strange. "We are all big fans of his work, clearly," Feige said. "We're also fans of his cartoon Rick & Morty, which is about, of course, humor, but I would argue that any given episode of that show has an unbelievably amazing sci-fi concept that could be its own movie. So, really, we just wanted him to watch the movie, and talk to us about it,

Read more: https://www.comicbookmovie.com/doctor_strange/kevin-feige-confirms-that-dan-harmon-added-humor-to-additional-a146135