

MARVEL topper KEVIN FEIGE considered frontrunner 4 DISNEY gig. S. Snider, S. Stuber, M. Parent & S. Bailey also in mix. variety.com/article/VR1118...— Jeff Sneider (@TheInSneider) April 20, 2012 Disney, as the owner of Marvel could very well pluck Feige from Marvel's film branch and place him in the top spot to oversee what movies are green-lit from Marvel, Dreamworks, Pixar and Disney. While that could potentially mean more Marvel movies per year with someone like Feige calling the shots, it also means that someone new will have to step into Feige's shoes. And while many would attribute the MCU's success to Jon Favreau and the first Iron Man movie, make no mistake, it was Feige behind the scenes, mandating certain story elements be included that has led us to The Avengers promise land. Of course the question here is that if Disney asks, can Feige really say no? Can Feige risk

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/GraphicCity/news/?a=58307>