

Marvel producer Kevin Feige is quite a busy man these days. After producing Thor and Captain America: TFA, he is now off to his next big project The Avengers. In the latest issue of the Empire magazine, Feige shares his opinion about director Joss Whedon sailing the big boat, and teases with a small hint at the threat The Avengers will have to face. Check it out below! On Joss Whedon handling a big cast and a possible mislead humour: He handles it very well. While I don't think anyone's going to mistake it for a comedy, I do think that the humour that's inherent in most of our movies, and which is inherent on in Joss' work, has found it's way into this" On another Villain besides Loki: "I've never been shy of saying that there needs to be a big threat, and it is a very, very big event that requires all of

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/CoastToCoastStation/news/?a=44095&t=Kevin_Feige_On_Joss_Whedon_Comedy_The_Villains_In_iThe_Avengersi